

Showing off 100 years' work

RED CROSS is celebrating 100 years, and from October 7 to 10, a travelling display of its history was displayed at the Alexandrina Council chambers.

Red Cross was formed at the outbreak of World War I. The humanitarian organisation, which alleviates human suffering and distress in times of war and natural disasters, will have its display visit council areas throughout the state.

Port Elliot Red Cross secretary Peg Martlew said Red Cross provides vital community health and welfare services.

"It gets the community together and the travelling display is an education tool on what Red Cross has done and still does over 100 years," she said.

"We just need to keep it going and we are always in need of new members."

If interested contact Peg Martlew on 8552 1320.

REPRESENTATION: Mike McRae represented Member for Finniss Michael Pengilly at the Red Cross travelling display, where he had a cuppa with Goolwa Primary School principal Pam McRobbie.

SPECIAL OCCASION: Port Elliot RSL member Russell Farr, Rotary Club of Victor Harbor's Geoff Simpson and Port Elliot Town and Foreshore member Sue Dixon joined forces to attend the 100 year celebration at Alexandrina Council on Wednesday, October 8.
